Q13 - Consideration should be given to a less onerous form of licensing for gas-operated firearms, while remaining subject to licensing. In this regard, the licensing of these firearms should be made more accessible when compared to higher-powered firearms. (Note: there are three types of gas-operated firearms: airsoft devices, paintball markers and gas-operated firearms which can use metal projectiles. Gas-operated firearms of over one joule are defined as firearms under the Firearms Act 1925, as a result possession of these devices is subject to the same certification and security framework provided for firearms which use an explosive propellant.)

Q19 - When a firearm is sought for the purpose of hunting and controlling medium quarry, such as fox, feral cat and other similar sized quarry, the following firearms would be suitable for this purpose: All types of rifles of a calibre between; .22” Hornet; .22” WMR .22”lr (at close range only).218” Bee; .22”-250 Swift; .22 Remi; 5.56mm/.223”/.243” 6mm PPC, 6mm/.244”; .220 Swift. Rifles of a lower calibre such as a .204 Ruger, or a .17 Remington provided they are used with expanding ammunition. Gas operated rifles over 16 joule, provided these firearms are of sufficient power to dispatch the quarry humanely. The Committee recommends that when a gas-operated rifle firearm is sought to dispatch fox sized quarry at a close range, the gas-operated rifle should be of approximately a minimum of 160 joules or 120 foot pounds approximately, in order to dispatch the quarry humanely. All types of shotgun, with the appropriate ammunition. In some circumstances, a pump action and/or semi-automatic shotguns with a capacity of over three rounds may be required.

Q23 - When a firearm is sought for the purpose of shooting bird quarry the following firearms are suitable: All types of shotgun. Pump-action and/or semi-automatic shotguns should have a maximum capacity of three rounds. A rifle or gas-operated firearm if permitted by a declaration or order issued by the Minister for Housing, Local Government and Heritage (non-game birds only). (Note: there are two types of bird quarry: “game bird” and “non-game bird”. A “game” species is one that is specified in an Open Seasons Order that the Minister for the Department of Housing, Local Government and Heritage publishes each year. Game birds may only be lawfully hunted by means of a shotgun, whereas, non-game birds may be shot either with a rifle or a shotgun in accordance with a declaration made by the Minister for Housing, Local Government and Heritage. Many birds that are shot each year are not “game” birds. These birds include Hooded Crow, Magpie, Rook, Jackdaw, Feral Pigeon, and Rock Dove. These species of bird will be detailed in a declarations made under the European Communities (Wildlife Act, 1976) (Amendment) Regulations 1986, as amended. The Minister of Housing, Local Government and Heritage may also grant permits under Section 42 of the Wildlife Act 1976 allowing the shooting of birds that are not specified in a “declaration” but which are causing certain kinds of damage.)

Q55 - The policy on the reloading of ammunition should be examined with a view to permitting reloading in residential abodes. (Note: Reloading refers to the process of individuals making ammunition by assembling the components (case/hull, primer, powder, and bullet or shot), rather than purchasing completely assembled, factory-loaded ammunition. This recommendation was the view of only one member of the Committee).

Q61 - A harmonised framework for authorisation and inspection of all ranges or where non-certificate holders are engaging in shooting should be introduced. (Note: all rifle and pistol target shooting ranges are subject to authorisation under Section 4A of the Firearms Act 1925, as amended. While not all shotgun ranges are currently subject to authorisation and inspection in the same manner as rifle and short firearm ranges, persons who do not hold a firearms certificate are prohibited from using a firearm unless they do so at a location authorised by An Garda Síochána. Thus, the range or location must be authorised by An Garda Síochána if a non-certificate holder is to engage in target shotgun or clay target shooting).

Q63 - It should be explicitly clear to certificate holders that firearms may only be used to hunt on land on which the person, or their club, has permission to shoot. Further, it would be preferable that all permissions be evidenced in a written form so they may be easily verified. (Note: There are existing limits to the locations where hunting may occur. The Wildlife Act 1976, as amended, establishes that it is illegal to hunt on any lands without the express permission of the landowner. The Committee believes there would be merit in providing that to use the firearm at a location without permission or to hunt wildlife in contravention of the wildlife legislation would also be a breach of the corresponding firearm certificate.)
